Transcending Gangs: Latinas Story their Experience

Liliana Castañeda Rossmann's research theorizes on how humans co-create and maintain their identities by telling stories. In particular, the stories of gang-involved Latinas have significant implications for transcending their gang experiences. Gangs offer women opportunities for leadership which would be unattainable otherwise. Yet, these leadership skills are hard-earned and, paradoxically, may marginalize them further once they leave the gang lifestyle. What works to help them get out? What works to keep them from getting involved in the first place? Drawing from an eclectic array of approaches, Rossmann makes suggestions to provide young Latinas with viable options to transcend the gang.
